

Given the green light

UNIVERSITY of Greenwich School of Land and Construction Management was recently given the "certificate of fitness" by the Higher Education Funding Council of England (HEFCE) following an extensive quality assessment exercise. The school scored 21 points out of 24.

HEFCE which contributes a substantial amount of funding for most universities in UK sent a team of assessors to inspect the facilities in the departments of civil engineering, building and land, and property management.

The assessment covered six aspects of the university's provisions including content and organisation, teaching, learning and assessment, student progression and achievement, student support and guidance, learning resources and quality assurance and enhancement.

"Our administrative procedures, management structures, teaching and support mechanisms and resources were inspected

TOP SCORERS: Anthony Kelly (extreme left), resident director of the Sunway-Greenwich twinning programme posing with students. Extreme right is Maxine Davis and Kenneth Holtom, international officers from the University of Greenwich, England against the six aspects of the university's provisions," says Maxine Davis, University of Greenwich International Officer.

University of Greenwich is one of Sunway College's twinning partners in UK. The programme offers degrees in quantity survey, building surveying, estate management, accounting and finance. Under the twinning programme, students undergo the first year at Sunway College and their final year at the University of Greenwich.

This material may be protected by the Malaysia Copyright Act. It may only be used for private study or research. Downloading or reproduction in excess of “fair dealing” may constitute copyright infringement.