Applying theory to the real world

JANESH Nathan, who completed his A Levels at Sunway College, said his time at the college has given him the chance to become more mature.

"I am able to comprehend complex problems through a systematic thought process, which was inculcated into the programme. The friends and teachers I met during my A Levels will always be an important part of my life, even though we have taken on different paths in life"

A recipient of the Gamuda Scholarship Award 2015, Janesh is in his first year of his three-year Bachelor of Commerce (Accounting) at Monash University Malaysia.

"The most interesting part of the programme is that the exam is structured in such a way that students have to understand the theory of the subject matter and apply it to real-world situations.

"This requires students to search for additional information beyond A-level books to obtain an understanding to apply them to problems."

"The programme is fantastic. It does not try to make sure you complete the programme, but provides you with a strong foundation that will be advantageous in future undertakings.

"Also, Sunway College has lecturers who make sure their students are well equipped to handle examinations and succeed in the future."

He said economics was his favourite subject. "I was always fascinated with the world's financial markets and the capital markets. Cheryl Low, my economics lecturer and also my mentor during A levels, encouraged me to pursue my dreams and provided support when I required help with economics after classes.

"Till today, when I encounter a tough problem at my university Economics unit, she is always willing to help me."

He was president of the A-Level Student Council.

"As president, I was able to draw upon the skills and talents of the Student Council members.

"It was interesting to see how a group of individuals from various backgrounds worked together with guidance and leadership to perform tasks and outperform their expectations.

"The best part of being president was being able to work with an outstanding student council. We organised some of the biggest events in the A-level programme, one of them being the Halloween Haunted Maze.

"I will cherish the memories of our teamwork and great times shared with my council peers as they made my experience a memorable one. I could never have been a successful president if not for the support of the team.

"My time at Sunway College provided me the opportunity to explore my leadership and teamworking skills through active involvement in extra-curricular activities."

The A Levels at Sunway College are not just about learning through textbooks and in the classroom.

Students are encouraged to participate in activities where they explore and learn communication and teamwork.

The Cambridge GCE A-Level Programme is one of the pre-university programmes at Sunway College.
